

American Unilateralism and the World Economy

January 20th, 2025

KURODA International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

America's tariff policy, in response to its massive trade deficit, will destroy global free trade. On the other hand, the inflow of international capital into advanced industries should not be lost.

These mean that absolute contradictions exist in their economies.

Moreover, cooperation with the West and the abandonment of the role of world policeman are new realities in unilateralism, and together with the racist reality, they propose a new world.

The BRICS alliance opposes these, but it cannot confront the partnership between the West and the US.

Understandably, they would turn against the last emperor, China. It is predictable that the righteousness of the Western camp, along with the manipulation of public opinion in the media, would seek to fight them.

Justice always demands a villain. This means China will face the same reality as Japan did during World War II.

These are new realities we can expect following a Trump presidency.

We must be prepared for everything until then. This response to the future foreshadows the fable of the ant and the grasshopper.

To face the world's new reality, we need to have all our bases to handle the new future. This is only permission for us to face the future itself.

Above all, we insist on any argument and sending all our ideas to the world; these are for us to seek new futures as we face any world realities. We may know. At least we have been answered.