Create the future

Consideration of the principle of competition and capitalism

KURODA International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

These are the praises of the winners and their beliefs in their wealth, the foundation of survival and the permanence of the past in war. These competitions always have winners and losers.

These social principles are the foundation of the world, and all nations in the world follow them. They have world ownership in the Illuminati and GAFSA and mega companies. These competitions occupy the cutting edge of the times, such as space technology, in the accumulation of wealth and technological progress.

It is the reality of all these competitions in capitalism and market forces, and the world of winners and losers in the reality of the transformed past of wars.

These sickness effects are that the weak are perpetuated, and these hierarchies have given a world in which all beings follow their glory. There are no doubts about these in the world, and the reality is to follow them.

These are battles and competitions that dominate the world, and because the world is owned by it, there is no choice but to obey them.

Communism, which has emerged in the past, has challenged these and has been defeated. Consideration of these is that the reality of freedom has the people's decisions.

The idea of symbiosis and coexistence can raise questions about the above reality, as well as responsibility to people in politics.

Competition gives conflict, and the illusion of shared world rules is less than the thirst for its winner.
