

KURODA International

Create the future

To the reality of monetary economy, market principle, and capitalism

KURODA International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

These give monetary value to the need in the market, and its free economic system gives the economic system in the principle of competition in supply and demand. These have the reality of a hierarchy of wealth. These give the struggle of competition in the economy, and its glory has only praise.

When seeking ethical and moral judgments from them, the reality of pursuing wealth and creating the vulnerable has a detrimental effect on the economy. On the other hand, the demand for corporate ethics and the trend of social participation in CSR demand new ethical demands from the economy.

Market share gives wealth occupancy. These are oligopolies in the development environment and capital strength, which have much greater social demand-based power.

They have a new relationship between economy and politics in the social demand of necessity. This is because the economy leaves politics and has its own pursuit in a liberal society.

In international trade rules, the reality of fair trade and Western ethics seeks new rules.

These considerations of reality are realities in the hierarchy of economic supremacy and wealth in the principle of competition. It must be correct that this permanence is the permanence of the world.

On the other hand, there is poverty. It is always right that the economy is the creation of affluence. These believe that the creation of new possibilities will be feasible in the construction of a new light with social system.

These are the current technological innovations that make it clear that new social systems can be created. The creation of these new worlds seeks the world for ethical self-judgment.