

The demand for survival and changes in the future

Kuroda International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

The demand for survival is everything in the past, and Western progress in sociology gives modernity with the advent of America. This is the participation in the reality of affluence, a new reality in the 20th and 21st centuries, which has completely fascinated all. The longing for high education and career gives everything in the world with the advent of IT rich. But responsibility to society and its progress always have reality as the basis for all of them.

This is a correct consideration of the past and present, and a correct basis for understanding when seeking the future.

They are the building of superiority and glory on the basis of survival, and no one denies this. But on the other hand, in having poverty and moral decadence, there is also the option of a solution.

Basic income in Scandinavia and inventive steps into new social systems are suggestions for a new world in sociological and moral progress.

These are one proof that human progress exists with responsibility to the world, and they have been the driving force of the world forever.

Technological and academic advances have the creation of a new world. Participation in smart cities, IOTs, and space ages is no longer illusions. But on the other hand, it has the reality of people in the lowest layers.

This requires politics to make the final choice. It should be correct that all beings have their own dreams and future, and that the world itself has only participation in the future in self-decisions.

The reality of symbiosis and peace and the reality of confrontation and war are the reality of two worlds, to the permanence of the future, the world has a step towards the future in self-decision.