

To a new world where all people participate

Kuroda International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

The transition of the world from monopoly to sharing creates a new world in which all beings participate equally. People's participation in all these opportunities, accompanied by their learning environment, allows participation at the end of basic education.

These offer all people to participate in the future, and the dynamism of changing times clearly proves a shift to the future.

The transition to basic income means that all beings are guaranteed a basic life, and we can propose solutions to poverty and moral defeat.

These are the transitions to neo-communism, and the new world of new technology can realize new possibilities on the basis of its survival and security of life.

The creation of a new civilization makes education free and obliges even university education.

These new financial resources call for the construction of a new economic system, and from the principle of competition, propose the creation of new technologies in industry-government-academia collaboration.

These new social transformations will demand a new political presence and will come to fruition with the creation of political plans.
