World considerations on basic human rights and humanity

KURODA International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

Basic human rights call for the provision of a basic human living environment to be legal and to deny the reality of poor to ask more than any solutions. A humanitarian world consensus can call for the construction of the world, along with the above consensus.

These allow politics to form consensus on the reality of poverty and the vulnerable, morally decadent. These allow the world to cooperate and seek a new world for all in a political agreement to build a new world.

These are the agreements between the Human Rights Council and the Humanitarian Council that can bring about new social standardization around the world, including the development of third countries in fiscal spending. These are to realize the sharing of society and living environment in advanced technology at the meeting, and the foundation of basic income will realize the construction of a new society and life.

Since history has war and poverty, they agree to resolve it and re-establish the world's consensus and creation in the agreement to abandon war and overcome the need for survival to a next stage.
