

The need for fiscal soundness

Kuroda International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

Fiscal spending in all nations of the world at COVID-19 gives its fiscal deterioration in the present and in the future. These require a transition to a new technological civilization in its efficient fiscal spending and fiscal soundness.

These are the reduction of national budget deficits and new cost-efficiency standards in spending, which will bring about a new national environment in administrative planning.

These will realize the conversion of the nation to next-generation technology in all fields of society, life, and industry. These carry out a complete national transformation. Equally new developments in space technology participate in space in its practicality.

These will improve the new educational environment and carry out social and administrative reforms. These clearly realize the creation of a new future in administrative decisions.

These need to take responsibility for the soundness of national finance, not the default.

These are to carry out the soundness of state management together with the examination of the self-political environment, and it is absolutely necessary for the state to carry out its own soundness and correctness, such as the creation of a new self-diplomatic policy.

Also, a shift in spending efficiency standards can be achieved with a new national image and vision, along with political decisions again to build a new state.

These are proposals for the reconstruction of the nation, and they can carry out a new nation as a reality, along with the current social revolution, industrialization revolution, and technological revolution.
