The Principles of Competition and the Truth of the Capitalist World

KURODA International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

These are the principles of fighting, where fighting gives winners and losers. Wealth is its symbol. These give the world a complete dichotomy. The elite has its crown and glory.

The principle of equality is communism. The former communist nations gained their own collapse in inhumane purges and authoritarianism. Liberalism had a world in its free trade and the justice and power of America.

These are one result of history being dominated in war. There are winners and losers there.

A great power in any history never had its eternity. Technological progress makes it possible.

If this is the present, the world faces that choice.

The only truth is that there is always an eternal victim. Therefore, humanitarian judgment is always required.

When seeking consideration in philosophy, we consider people's understanding of purpose and the means of labor, the reality of humanity and power in politics, these are eternal considerations in the ancient West. These do not get the answer now.

The fact that material affluence does not give spiritual satisfaction gives a return to Eastern philosophy. But I can't give them an answer. Because there is no one who knows it.

However, even with these contradictions and conflicts, the world cannot stop its journey toward the eternal future.
