

Self-building in the nation and its necessity and action

Kuroda International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

The nation aims at independence and has only itself own existence. Not gaining independence is only a state as a subordinate.

Politics always seeks self-improvement and gives the nation in expressing its progress of understanding. Organizations are required in their own check and examinations and seek their own stability and security for a nation. This is because the stable self-building of the nation in crisis management must always be considered.

Independence is independence. Therefore, he denies subordination and is required to make his own efforts.

Technology enables its breakthroughs, and advances in academics correctly represent the nation.

The nation is required to build its stable self with the world. They maintain independence in their superiority over the world. Equality is shown not to be superior because it still has its own crisis.

The construction of all industries in their capital is required to be fully satisfied with their livelihoods and national demands, and the principle of self-sufficiency always requires them to dominate in competition in the market economy. This Is only condition to ask own security.

Since society and life are always the foundation of the nation, the best self-maintenance gives the future of the nation.
