Philosophy is the basis for all new world systems and the new reality that may come.

I propose a shift from the absolutes of life, which are the need for survival and competition, to a new reality: the pursuit of purpose and the security of life.

All these are the shift from all hobbits of ancient to new technological civilizations.

Under all these points of view, we need to reconsider liberalism and free economic systems as we try to recreate all new world systems.

We believe that the need for survival causes all conflict and war. Technological advances today make it possible to transition from a past dominated by terrorism to a future in which new abundance and purpose are realized.

The economy is the source of wealth. Today, the economy is progressing in competition, and no one can deny it.

The keywords propose a leap from the reality of survival and competition to a new stage of coexistence and life assurance.

These are a search for a new reality with new systems. As we try to seek a new technological civilization, we need its basis, which may permit all future possibilities, as we require new philosophies with it.

Any academic study of its progress is new, and we can recreate the world using it. This means we can renew everything.

And politics has a decision on how to make the world with its new designs.
