

Change and the future

April 6th, 2025

KURODA International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

The old system may not adjust to the new future, which makes any changes to its framework.

These are ancient realities transforming into an entirely new future in technological advancement.

These are why we are trying to create a new dialogue to create a new world framework. We have all its dialogue to recreate any reality of the world.

We have a proper word for the next society. The new world may be based on the coming next societies.

We may share its new word framework, the basis of a new technological civilization. It has all the considerations to shift the world to a new future. Any understanding of reality is all its basis, which we are permitted to seek for the future.

We now have all the changes in our realities, proving we are trying to shift to the new future. A new world is constructed under all the progress of its technologies.

The old society is the reality of existing analog and handicrafts, while the new future is one of infinite abundance brought about by excellent efficiency and productivity improvements in automation and other areas.

So, a new framework may be required for a zero-emission society and a circular economy. The next society may be under-constructed with the latest infrastructure and any measure and a new standard of realities.

These are possible with political consensus and decisions that are made in the future.

These are dreams that we find in the past, but they are reality in the future.