

Coexistence Society

February 21st, 2025

Kuroda International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

We are setting aside all competition to introduce a new coexistence society with the world. We have also advanced in social systems, including Society 5.0 and circular economies.

Survival principles require competition, which causes wars and conflicts. Therefore, we need to shift to a new world system.

If everyone were allowed to pursue their purpose in their lifetimes, what difference would it make in the world? New world systems may encompass all systems under the consensus of all political entities.

As we see, these are causing new philosophies; we must recognize that all progress and changes in realities are based on philosophical shifts.

Today we are experiencing a shift in reality due to advancements in technology. On the other hand, we need to re-evaluate our foundations with input from all academics.

From any failures and mistakes, which represent all problems, we can seek new changes. We need to recognize that great politicians possess a profound understanding of philosophies.

The concept of symbiosis suggests that everyone has an equal stake in the future, and the world receives its fair share of life.

We can recognize these as the hopes we share with the world. A new global consensus and principles can emerge through our dialogues.

And we may find that these are the beginnings of a new civilization, shifting from the past to a united future.

New socialism may not request that people who feel their hopes are unfulfilled be rejected from the world.

