

Consideration of the reality of committing a crime

Kuroda International

Takeshi Kuroda

This is the inability to live and demanding death. It means and is the reality that society does not allow these beings to live. This should demand a denial to society, not a denial to these beings.

It is a political obligation to provide a living and a humane self-environment to all, and they are possible to solve.

In addition, consideration of these requires a shift to a humanitarian society and reality, and sharing of society and life in humanitarianism requires society to share judgments on these mistakes and to make judgments and solutions to individual reality.

This is not a denial in the value of good, but not by all means, and we must agree to provide a humane life.

If this is the reality of excluding and denying these beings in the reality of good, denial, and exclusion, then political consensus and judgment in humanity give the world a different reality.

These always demand a judgment that society does not seek hypocrisy, and seek the detection of criminals who hide in these lies.