

Corporate internationalization and global market unification

Kuroda International

Takeshi Kuroda

We believe that the unification of the world market will give new competition and acquisition of companies in the world market in its leading edge, superiority and capital strength in its absolute presence in the future.

It is conceivable that large companies will occupy the market in capital and technology. National security requires the maintenance and construction of a clear domestic industry, along with its cutting edge.

These are capital strengths, presences, and technological strengths that, along with their soft and hard assets, perpetuate their core competencies. The creation of these wealth always produces the possession of wealth.

This makes the market even in the world, and its superiority in products and services has absoluteness. Market unification, such as free trade agreements, also gives those companies an edge, with demand in products and prices far superior to others.

They have a space industry in reality, and participation in space creates endless new possibilities.

These are the realities that the world has, and it has the future. Since these are unpredictable in truth, handling with the current situation and countermeasures are always required.

This means that a company can obtain its own stability without creating a new corporate environment by possessing a technological foundation and product know-how of the company, changing production to the world's leading standards, and shifting corporate operating standards to the world's leading standards. must be.

These are the challenges and participations of a company in having all freedoms in the free economic system, and reaching these times is that the existence of a company in having its stable profits makes itself a winner.
