

Creating new abundance

June 7th, 2025

KURODA International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

The responsibility of politics to provide for the life of all beings is to establish a social framework that enables individuals to exist. These must be created in abundance to ensure the livelihood and future of all beings.

New abundance may be created under the progress of all realities today. They have new efficiency and productivity, which may permit a new world.

We are far removed from the requirements of survival, and new systems may be introduced to help us adapt to a new world.

These are all new realities we have in the world today. And all new basis gives us the new possibility to recreate the world.

We have a new society that is free from the requirement of survival, but we are now seeking a new purpose in our lives.

All these new realities incorporate the latest technology, and dialogue may encompass new philosophies.

All social and global problems may stem from conflicts over survival principles. So, the new world may be far from all its conflicts and offer new possibilities for any reality.

We may redesign all of reality under a new consensus of philosophy and establish new world principles, driven by the revolution in the use of the latest technology and systems.

We may dream of a future, as the new future is entirely different from its past, with a new framework and systems.

This may be achieved through political consensus and new actions. And this is why we are trying to establish a new dialogue with the world.