Technology and industry create new futures and support all its lifelines. These are the proper understandings of economic policy.

We have a free economic system, and all businesses seek their profit. We find all progressed technology and systems, which are envied and give new lifestyles.

These also show the necessity of economic security policy. The creation of domestic industry gives the government all its income.

The domestic economy, as the bedrock of national progress and development, is a prerequisite for any nation seeking to advance.

Possession of the economy exists, and it is based on massive capital and finance from the global economy.

These conditions necessitate an economic order, which is established through legislation and the ownership of domestic capital.

Domestic systems and ownership must possess and create the financial system. These are the security of the economy as we move toward new digitalized futures.

An economic group may be gathered based on the progress of its economy and food security.

Any progress in technology and systems requires industry, and they may have all the potential to recreate society and life.

Politics may lead to all the above realities, which are a new design for the nation's future.

A trade agreement can be a bilateral agreement.
