

Formal diplomatic negotiations with space

May 8th, 2024

Kuroda International Consulting

Takeshi Kuroda

We are endeavoring to extend our reach into the vast expanse of the universe, and every new frontier necessitates a solid foundation. This is where your invaluable expertise in space and technology comes into play, making this a formal diplomatic negotiation with the cosmos.

Asking for new cooperation should permit the earth to recreate itself in the new world.

Politics should argue and discuss the future. We find that technology may progress to any standard of space. It may give us new possibilities in any field of reality.

These call for formal participation and discussion in our solar system and galaxy and are the basis for full cosmic participation.

These formal diplomatic negotiations and treaty agreements determine the planet's future and are based on global agreements and decisions.

These require public disclosure and decision-making by a majority vote at the United Nations General Assembly.

All these means to realize full participation in space.

We need a new world management format to base all the above realities.

We can imagine that all space technology may seek progress as we make new steps into the universe.

We can forecast a new reality under all these environments and remake the world. These are plans we can share with the whole world. They are recreations of the world itself.

Politics must determine themselves in coming changes.