

Forming an army and building self-security

Kuroda International Foundation

Takeshi Kuroda

The only option is to face NATO on an equal footing. Form a self-group in terms of technology, scale, global expansion and presence in base collaboration, and collaboration with space.

These realize the formation of a self-alliance on the basis of the Asian unification. We have to have the same capital and infrastructure development, software and hardware in capital power, society, technology and academics, military, industry, and space technology, and propose to participate in the world in their cooperation.

In the development of the military, in the standardization of all standards, we will build a self-presence in the world and respond individually to changes in reality.

These are to have the cutting edge as the NATO army in themselves, and to participate in the world in new diplomacy.

These are the expansions into space in the development of their infrastructure, and the shift to new technological standards, along with new energies, is a complete shift between society and reality.

The security that accompanies them participates in new policies and philosophies in the maintenance and operation of self-reality in independence.
