

Fostering sound national finances

July 15th, 2025

KURODA International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

National finances will be debt-free in principle, and will seek to balance expenditures and revenues. These will achieve this reality with high cost-efficiency, and will realize the future with sound national finances.

These, together with economic policies, will realize a sound national finance and build infrastructure for new changes.

In principle, the issuance of government bonds will be limited to special cases, and their repayment will be required to be planned.

And we can see we have all the requirements to build new technological civilizations. And all academics are based on these principles to prepare them for the future.

Under all these points of view, we have all the necessities of national security, including the economy and military. Then we have our decisions of diplomacy.

We may find this is how we can reach national independence and hold the future in our hands.

With all the above, we have all our new steps into the universe. And all these developments must have something to do with the progress of academics.

Under all these points of view, we may plan the nation under the redesigning of the self. These require all new human resources to ask for all new progress of the nation.

And we can see these are the potentials we are facing in a new future, with any hopes we can share.

So politics may determine the self to realize itself within a nation. And it is fully possible under our decision of self.