

Indian Government Planning

July 4th, 2024

KURODA International Consulting

Takeshi Kuroda

Our strategic plan involves promising state-of-the-art housing and living conditions for all. By building these realities in our industry, we can confidently project a 15% annual GDP growth for ten years. This growth trajectory will position us to surpass the United States in our economy, military, and space industries, instilling a sense of confidence in our strategic planning.

The construction of a new society, along with cutting-edge systems, promises to create and transform all realities in the country's industries and to transform the nation into the reality of the next generation.

These will give liberal and democratic nations an expanded presence in the world and will require them to take on new responsibilities in their participation in the international community.

This strategic plan calls for a new relationship with the colonial power, Great Britain, proposing a transition to a friendly relationship alongside national independence.

The new national plan places a significant emphasis on providing and enhancing the best educational environment for all children. It aims to establish many of the world's best university institutions and cultivate human resources for the reality of the future.

These are proposed as administrative plans, along with the soundness of national finances and the development of domestic industry.

These will be presented as a shared consensus among all politicians at the central and local levels and will be implemented.

The Indian idea of peace and coexistence is a commitment to unity, friendship and peace in the world.