The origin of the new civil society in modern times, which states that the king and his government are not above the law, proposes the creation of a new world through dialogue, as opposed to power politics and authoritarianism.

These are the roots of modern civil society, and they are an understanding of the standards of today's world, the West.

These humanity and ideals, civicism and rationalism, the principle of competition and high ethics, are the foundations of today's world in the reality of the West.

These are the origins of the conscience of the West and today's competition and progress.

They prove that a leap into a new future can be explored on these foundations.

However, the reality of capitalism means that the world today owns the world's wealth.

Therefore, a global dialogue in ideals proposes the sharing of new principles in the world.

The creation of a new future proposes the construction of new world rules, which can realize the sharing of a new world through agreement.

In this context, the new principle of law can propose a new world as an ideal.

This is what we at Kuroda International, with our roots in the East, propose as the first dialogue between East and West.

We believe that this agreement can make it possible to realize the world and the future.
