

Military Judgments on the Ukrainian Front and Considerations on NATO's Advanced Military Environment

Kuroda International Consulting

Takeshi Kuroda

Against the US military's ability to formulate strategy and tactics, advanced military technology, and organizational management, the deployment and reality of the Russian army fully comprehended the end of the Cold War structure. These should give a transition to a new world order.

These are the next-generation standards, new realities exist in the world, and new realities have transitioned to these entirely.

These mean that there is a new world, that there is a new future, and that there are criteria and requirements for its participation. History gives its sorting and examination; it is right to sort out the future.

All these give us an idea of the similar reality in Holly Wood's movie. We have a future that is totally different with new technologies.

This means that understanding and attainment of the leading-edge standard is absolutely required. And we have to know that is a reality we have.

While the U.S. military correctly perceives reality and actions in organizational management and strategic and tactical planning, Russia's self-judgment error suggests that they completely misunderstand the times.

To fail in the future means may not reach time.

All this proves that there are all requirements to construct a nation and society to reach the future. That is only from any effort of self. They must clearly understand that authoritarianism takes away these realities.

Perhaps the fable of the ant and the grasshopper and the rabbit and the tortoise represents the truth.