

National responsibility

Office
of
KURODA International Consulting
Takeshi Kuroda

Running the nation is a shared responsibility by all people. The nation takes all responsibility for serving life to all people.

These are the nations that have the foundation of the people and take on the challenge of new possibilities.

Nationalism has given conflict and war to the past. Together with the free activities of the people, creating a new reality suggests the original form of liberalism, in which the state guarantees the free activities of the people, and the activities of the people form the state.

These are the reality of the USA. Therefore, their nations have vitality and the creation of the reality of the future.

A small government can seek to maintain and operate the state in private activities. These challenge the new reality of maintaining the state in national activities.

Ensuring a livelihood for all citizens can reduce social costs, increase production, and seek national soundness.

Demanding a nation's responsibility for the lives and protection of its citizens is to exercise its independence and security in the world, and these equal selves provide the only right participation in the world.