

National security and industry

February 2nd, 2024

KURODA International Consulting

Takeshi Kuroda

We have all military balance that is reconsidered with all new technology. And we see that the domestic industry must produce them all in their effort.

From the point of view of security, we need our plans for domestic industry. In a nation, any requirement must be produced by domestic industry.

As we see in the American army, top technology is less of a standard as we need to seek for the future. These are the proper consensus for us to seek and step into the future.

As we have all political environments and any analysis of the world, we definitely need them to be the most progressed. That gives us the future. That is all the reason.

And society must shift to the next generation's standard. These are the future bases under reconsideration by politicians and their plans.

Achieving this modernity in domestic politics will enable Japan to participate in the world in diplomacy for the first time. The domestic industry provides all these realities, and industrial planning in economic policy and politics is necessarily the basis for this.

On the other hand, these are the requirements of national independence. That only permits one's own decisions in international society.

Any human resources must deeply consider the redesign of the nation as any effort of bureaucracy.

Participating in the world with the best of oneself is the only way to make the future possible.

All these also require all academic environments to help us progress in the future. And we see politics has all its decisions.