

Sharing equal responsibility to share the world

July 24th, 2024

KURODA International Consulting

Takeshi Kuroda

First, let me ask: who possesses the world, the king or the people?

The Western camp occupies all responsibility for the world, so if we share equal responsibility, what may we find all differences in reality?

These are the new relationships from the East to the West. Although we may have had different histories in the past, this may unify us under the same consensus.

Imagine a world where we all hold hands and share the responsibility equally. This vision engages us all in the process of shaping our shared future.

Our collective wisdom, drawn from both the East and the West, is crucial in shaping the world and its future. Each perspective is valuable and deserves respect.

If intelligence can take on the world and win, we might have a future.

The great challenge has been accomplished. All that remains is to execute.

We have a choice for the future. Who may lead them and make us find hope?

We have all world designs, which you may try further efforts on. This may be the only choice we have to try for the world.

Not to seek any right but responsibility to take your new steps into the world. What may be the difference you may find?

And we can find this is the attitude we need in all politics.

These are the letters from us to all kings since the king has a decision of the world.