

The World Disarmament Conference and the Outlawing of the Reality of War

July 22nd, 2025

KURODA International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

The expansion of global military spending today is a catalyst for new wars, and I believe that calling for new agreements in international politics to reduce military forces and outlaw war will enable the world to realize a new future, along with new cooperation.

They offer a new world dialogue of calm and reason; they offer an international political consensus on a new responsibility for all the world's children.

If these war lusts are the demands of the American military-industrial complex, then a new consensus of reason will realize a new world consensus.

These agreements for a new world of peace can realize a new world of cooperation to realize the possibilities of the future.

These new infrastructures in a standardized world can realize the creation of a new society and way of life with next-generation technologies and systems.

They can propose new economic frameworks, such as agreement and cooperation on serious environmental issues, and the realization of new, fair global rules that are not the monopoly of capital, along with new dialogue.

These are the attitudes of responsibility that should be shared by all international societies to seek the same purpose.

We may know these are the result of new dialogue. And it is fully possible under new cooperation of the world.

These seek to confront the reality and truth of the world in terms of the world's common sense and conscience, and offer new choices for the world.