

The collapse of the free trade system under President Trump's tariff policy and predictions of a new global economy

February 11th, 2025

KURODA International Consulting LLC

Takeshi Kuroda

The free trade system is facing the new tariff policy of President Trump. As we find new economic security in the liberal camp, all global economies must seek new eras.

There are various free trade agreements. These are agreements on economic free trade.

Understandably, these allow third-world countries to operate businesses that export to developed countries with low wages.

Also, today, automated production systems, fluctuations in currency values, interest rate policies, and price fluctuations are changing economic reality.

The new elites have the cutting edge in the economy and create a new reality.

All these are the framework of global economies. And besides all these realities, we have a world finance system and realities.

We may find that there are entirely new changes in this free trade system and the reality of the global economy.

The world rules are broken under the appearance of President Trump. So when we try to ask for domestic policy, we need to change all our minds to realize our reality of self.

If the world loses its laws and rules as international principles, we may experience chaos, and new conflicts may cover any reality.

The power game must reach a peak at this moment. Then, we may find that we need the principles of the new world.

These are how we are trying for a new world under new dialogues.