The world in which money decides all. These are all the progress realities that are based on the survival principle.

Any progress of the survival principle may not be the correct evolution. That means if we are seeking new world systems, it may not be based on the survival principle.

And we can see what the consensus of capitalism is. We can see that any habit of reality has a judgment under wealth.

We can recalculate all the realities of the free economic system from these points of view.

Furthermore, we may propose new world systems, and there may be arguments in international society to seek new world principles.

These factors create a society of inequality and class. And we need to know whether any justice of liberalism causes these.

We may know that these are all tails, which we are trying to propose a new world system.

We may recognize that all failures stem from the world and the future, and these are the remarks we can share within the new world systems.

And any consensus of all politics may follow all these new world principles.

We can see that fairness may all be a tail of the new reality of the world. That may be the rules, but on the other hand, we have competitions.

We need to recognize that competition is the foundation of our progress in history, and these are the essential requirements for survival.

Western rationalism and modern scholarship are global trends, and these are the foundations that gave them victory over the past reality of war and competition.

We have an idea inspired by the lyrics of Mr. John Lennon's song "Imagine."
