

The economy with a national security

KURODA International Consulting
Takeshi Kuroda

The economy is always the backbone of national security. Based on the economy, a nation could follow all possibilities in the future.

As we look around the reality of the world, all technology production gives all use for the realities.

Academic bases are the right measure for the progress of the world. These are the right understanding of its bases for seeking reality and the future.

A national plan must base on the progress of all academics that gives all use and practicality to any realities.

Education must be the bases of the future. That may not ask to be a tool of being but the right growth of humanity.

We could calculate with any superiorities of any realities of the world. That we find it is an equal measure for any reality of nations.

It means the development of the industry is the right growth for a nation. On the other hand, the affluence of life is the construction of a correct national reality, and there is a demand for administrative planning.

These require a great deal of intelligence to run and build a nation, and they are the only ones that make integrity possible in a nation.

People should not be tools. This agreement is certainly correct. This is the agreement that gives the nation justice and integrity.