

COP 26

Kuroda International

Takeshi Kuroda

The transition to a world with zero environmental impact requires a complete agreement at COP26, and ruled product production and social construction in all industries.

These political agreements give reality, and agreements are easily possible. Government involvement in the world's natural environment also creates a lasting environment for living and realizes the creation of a new world along with technological innovation.

These are the shifts to new cooperation, not the conflicts and conflicts that humankind has, and the world shares its judgment in the common interests of all.

These are proposals to the world for new possibilities such as the abolition of war and the sharing of the future.

These propose participation in the world as a new foundation and standard for private organizations and governments.

The reality of the future gives it the possibility, and the choice to lose it is always wrong.